Einstein: Albert Einstein (1879 - 1955), German physicist, US citizen from 1940: formulated the theory of relativity; awarded 1921 Nobel prize for physics. Although complete understanding of his theory of relativity requires a knowledge of the most exotic branches of mathematics, these are some of its basic points: (1) Time is not an absolute. The faster a body moves, the slower its clock runs. A minute on Earth may pass in fifty-nine seconds or sixty-one seconds on planets traveling at speeds different from that of Earth. (2) The speed of light remains constant in all frames of reference. Whether you are moving toward a light source or away from it, the light will still reach you at the same speed (186,000 miles per second). (3) All motion is relative. Therefore, there can be no such thing as absolute rest. (4) Moving bodies acquire mass as they increase in speed. The faster a body travels, the heavier it becomes. As a body approaches the speed of light, it adds mass very rapidly. If it were to reach the speed of light, its mass would become infinite. If this were true it could be seen that no body could ever travel faster than the speed of light. The additional weight acquired by an accelerating body would make penetration of the light barrier impossible. (5) Mass and energy are mutually convertible. —SHSBC Binder 23 Approved Glossary bodies acquire mass as they increase in speed. The faster a body travels, the heavier it becomes. As a body approaches the speed of light, it adds mass very rapidly. If it were to reach the speed of light, its mass would become infinite. If this were true it could be seen that no body could ever travel faster than the speed of light. The additional weight acquired by an accelerating body would make penetration of the light barrier impossible. (5) Mass and energy are mutually convertible. Einstein theory: the general theory of relativity, proposed in 1905 by Albert Einstein. Although complete understanding of this theory requires a knowledge of the most exotic branches of mathematics, these are some of its basic points: (1) Time is not an absolute. The faster a body moves, the slower its clock runs. A minute on Earth may pass in fifty-nine seconds or sixty-one seconds on planets traveling at speeds different from that of Earth. (2) The speed of light remains constant in all frames of reference. Whether you are moving toward a light source or away from it, the light will still reach you at the same speed (186,000 miles per second). (3) All motion is relative. Therefore, there can be no such thing as absolute rest. (4) Moving bodies acquire mass as they increase in speed. The faster a body travels, the heavier it becomes. emotion: a response by wavelength affecting an individual or another which produces a sensation and a state of mind. —Scientology 8-80 Glossary Final approval 13.2.90 emotion: a response by wavelength affecting an individual or another which produces a sensation and a state of mind. Emotion is a connector between thought and effort. ((Added for glossary entry only - not in footnote)) It is a manifestation of beingness, and closely related to motion. One handles motion on a direct ratio with his ability to handle emotion; the higher his emotion level, the more control he can exert over motion; the lower his emotion level, the more he succumbs to motion. —Scientology 8-8008 Glossary Final approval c. 3 Mar 1990 emotion: the catalyst used by the control center to monitor physical action. The relay system, via glands, interposed between "I" and self and, by thought, others. The main emotions are happiness, in which one has confidence and enjoyment in his goals and a belief in his control of environment; boredom, in which one has lost confidence and direction but is not defeated; antagonism, wherein one feels his control threatened; anger, wherein one seeks to destroy that which threatens and seeks without good direction beyond destruction; covert hostility, wherein one seeks to destroy while reassuring his target that he is not so seeking; fear, wherein one is catalyzed to flee; grief, in which one recognizes loss; apathy, in which one accepts failure on all dynamics and pretends death. Other emotions are a volume or a lack of volume of those named. Shame or embarrassment are emotions peculiar to groups or interpersonal relations and are on a level with grief, denoting loss of position in a group. Emotion is the glandular system parallel of motion and each emotion reflects action to gain or lose to motion. At a high level one is sending back motion, at a mid level one is holding motion, at a

- lower level, motion is sweeping through and over one. —APA Glossary (app 11.7.90)

epicenter: the word epicenter is taken from its derivation as meaning something approximating a center off the center—“other center” or something of the sort. It is a center on the center, technically, accurately. And it is a study of the successive command posts of a human organism. A command post is the control center of the organism and can be defined as the contact point between theta and the physical universe and is that center which is aware of being aware and which has charge of and responsibility for the organism along all its dynamics. The theory of epicenters merely states that there is an evolution of command posts, and that those command posts remain structurally visible in the organism. —History of Man Glossary (app. 11.7.90)

- executive: one who holds a position of administrative or managerial responsibility in an organization. To give one some idea of the power associated with the word, Noah Webster, in 1828, defined it as "The officer, whether king, president or other chief magistrate, who superintends the execution of the laws; the person who administers the government, executive power or authority in government." Executive is used in distinction from legislative and judicial. The body that deliberates and enacts laws is legislative; the body that judges or applies the laws to particular cases is judicial; the body or person who carries the laws into effect or superintends the enforcement of them is executive, according to its nineteenth-century governmental meaning according to Webster. The word comes from the Latin "Ex(s)equi (past participle ex(s)ecutus), execute, follow to the end: ex-, completely + sequi, to follow." In other words, he follows things to the end and gets something done. —How To Live Though an Executive. Final approval 31.10.89 exteriorization: the person is “outside” his body when returned to an incident. These exteriorized views of self have two explanations: One of them is valence, whereby the person has taken unto himself the identity of another person and sees the scene through that other person's eyes. The other is exteriorization, in which painful emotion is present in such quantity that the person cannot occupy himself. Today, the term means the action of moving out of one's body. One can view the body or control the body from a distance. It is the state of the thetan, the individual himself, being outside his body. When this is done, the person achieves a certainty that he is himself and not his body. —Notes on the Lectures Glossary Final approval 26 March 1990 facsimile: 1. a three-dimensional color picture with sound and smell and all other perceptions, plus the conclusions or speculations of the individual. 2. facsimiles are energy reproductions of things in the various universes. They are fixed to ridges. ÑLRH, 8-8008 —Scientology 8-8008 Glossary Final approval c. 3 Mar 1990 facsimile: a facsimile is a memory recording for a finite period of time. It is considered that memory is a static without wavelength, weight, mass or position in space (in other words, a true static) which yet receives the impression of time, space, energy and matter. A careful examination of the phenomena of thought and the behavior of the human mind lead one to this conclusion. The conclusion is itself a postulate used because it is extremely useful and workable. This is a point of echelon in research, that a facsimile can be so described. The description is mathematical and an abstract and may or may not be actual. When a thought recording is so regarded, the problems of the mind rapidly resolve. Facsimiles are said to be «stored.» They act upon the physical universe switchboard called the brain and nervous and glandular system to monitor action. They appear to have motion and weight only because motion and weight are recorded into them. They are not stored in the cells. They impinge upon the cells. Proof of this matter rests in the fact that an energy which became a facsimile a long time ago can be recontacted and is found to be violent on the contact. Pain is stored as a facsimile. Old pain can be recontacted. Old pain, in facsimile form, old emotion in facsimile form, can reimpose itself on present time in such a wise as to deform or otherwise physically affect the body. You can go back to the last time you hurt yourself and find there and reexperience the pain of that hurt, unless you are very occluded. You can recover efforts and exertions you have made or which have been made against you in the past. Yet the cells themselves, which have finite life, are long since replaced although the body goes on. Hence the facsimile theory. The word facsimile is used as bluntly as one uses it in connection with a drawing of a box top instead of the actual box top. It means a similar article rather than the article itself. You can recall a memory picture of an elephant or a photograph. The elephant and the photograph are no longer present. A facsimile of them is stored in your mind. A facsimile is complete with every perception of the environment present when that facsimile was made including sight, sound, smell, taste, weight, joint position and so on through half a hundred perceptions. Just because you cannot recall motion or these perceptions does not mean they were not recorded fully and in motion with every perception channel you had at the time. it does mean that you have interposed a stop between the facsimile and the recall mechanisms of your control centers. There are facsimiles of everything you have experienced in your entire lifetime and everything you have imagined. —APA Glossary (app 11.7.90)

- FDR: initials of Franklin Delano Roosevelt (1882 - 1945), thirty-second president of the United States from 1933 to 1945. He became president near the beginning of a major economic depression and continued in office through reelection based on promises to relieve the strife the depression had caused. In May 1933 Roosevelt created the Federal Emergency Relief Administration and gave it $500 million in federal funds for the most seriously destitute. This was the beginning of a federal welfare program. He was also responsible for creating another government agency (the Agricultural Adjustment Administration) that raised farm prices by paying farmers to take their land out of production. This resulted in 10 million acres of cotton being plowed under and 6 million pigs being slaughtered while many Americans were starving. —PDC Volume 4 Approved Glossary

Frazer's Golden Bough: a comprehensive work on comparative religion and mythology by Sir James George Frazer (1854 - 1941), Scottish scholar and anthropologist. Its opening passages describe an ancient Italian folk custom regarding the King of the Wood: Near Lake Nemi (a lake near Rome) in Italy was a sacred grove of the goddess Diana. In it was a special golden tree. To become a priest of Diana and King of the Wood one had to succeed in pulling down a bough of this tree and thus earn the right to duel to the death with the current King of the Wood. If he won he would then assume the position until another, stronger aspirant came along and succeeded in killing him, becoming in his turn the King of the Wood. Frazer's initial intent was to trace the source of this legend. Drawing from similar traditions and rituals of other peoples, his work expanded and tied together (sometimes incorrectly) many myths and legends from around the world. —SHSBC Binder 22 Approved Glossary

- Freud, Sigmund: (1856 - 1939), Austrian physician and neurologist, founder of psychoanalysis: a system of mental therapy developed in 1894. It depended upon the following practices for its effects: The patient was made to talk about and recall his childhood for years while the practitioner brought about a transfer of the patient's personality to his own and searched for hidden sexual incidents believed by Freud to be the only cause of aberration. The practitioner read sexual significances into all statements and evaluated them for the patient along sexual lines. Each of these points later proved to be based upon false premises and incomplete research, accounting for their lack of result and the subsequent failure of the subject and its offshoots. —Clearing Congress No. 5 Clearing Procedure Approved Glossary

Goldwyn, Sam: (1882 - 1974) American film producer, born in Warsaw, Poland. Known as a man of taste and a perfectionist, Goldwyn demanded the best, whatever the cost. It was said that as long as one agreed with him it was easy to get along with him; otherwise he could be impossible. His last film, Porgy and Bess (1959), based on a play about a crippled black beggar, was extremely controversial and received a great deal of attention before filming even started. Many blacks protested the filming of this story because they felt that it was a giant step backward in their fight for equality. A story of fornication, drug addiction and murder, all told in heavy dialect, that, in their opinion, did nothing but reinforce black stereotypes. One black organization placed a double page advertisement against the film in various papers. After the filming of the movie started, Goldwyn and the director had disagreements about how the movie should be filmed. Goldwyn finally fired the director, even though he had successfully directed Porgy and Bess on the stage as a play and an opera. After that, another advertisement appeared in papers which stated in part: "The whole atmosphere at the Goldwyn studio is calculated to impress you that you are in the presence of a 'Great I Am,' the High Lama of Celluloid." —State of Man Congress Approved Gls (14.5.92)

Gradation Chart:*** short for Classification, Gradation and Awareness Chart of Levels and Certificates, the route to Clear and the states beyond, also called The Bridge to Total Freedom, or The Bridge. Classification means that there are certain actions required to be done or conditions to be attained before an individual is classified for a particular training level and allowed to progress up. Gradation means a gradual grade up, just as there are grades to a road or there are grades to steps. Awareness refers to one's own awareness, which improves as one progresses up. On the right side of this chart there are various steps called the states of Release. The left-hand side of the chart describes the very important steps of training on which one gains the knowledge and abilities necessary to deliver the grades of Release to another. It is a guide for the individual from the point where he first becomes dimly aware of a Scientologist or Scientology and shows him how and where he should move up in order to make it. Scientology contains the entire map for getting the individual through all the various points on this gradation scale and for getting him across the Bridge to higher states of existence. —OEC - Organization and Ethics App Mar 91

Grade Chart: the Classification, Gradation and Awareness Chart of Levels and Certificates, the route to Clear and the states beyond, also called The Bridge to Total Freedom, or The Bridge. Classification means that there are certain actions required to be done or conditions to be attained before an individual is classified for a particular training level and allowed to progress up. Gradation means a gradual grade up, just as there are grades to a road or there are grades to steps. Awareness refers to one's own awareness, which improves as one progresses up. On the right side of this chart there are various steps called the States of Release. The left-hand side of the chart describes the very important steps of training on which one gains the knowledge and abilities necessary to deliver the Grades of Release to another. It is a guide for the individual from the point where he first becomes dimly aware of a Scientologist or Scientology and shows him how and where he should move up in order to make it. Scientology contains the entire map for getting the individual through all the various points on this gradation scale and for getting him across the Bridge to higher states of existence. introduction of an "arbitrary": an arbitrary may be considered as a factor introduced into a problem's solution when that factor does not derive from a known natural law but only from an opinion or authoritarian command. A problem resolved by data derived from known natural laws resolves well and smoothly and has a useful solution. When a problem is resolved by introducing arbitraries (factors based on opinion or command but not natural law) then that solution, when used, will ordinarily require more arbitraries to make the solution applicable. The harder one tries to apply the solution corrupted by arbitraries to any situation, the more arbitraries have to be introduced. Thus in government, laws passed which contain arbitraries create new problems which cannot be solved without more new arbitraries and thus, rapidly, a top heavy and unworkable structure of government comes into being which would be workable only if wholly redesigned in the light of known natural laws about government. —Science of Survival Glossary (app 11.7.90) inverse: (of a proportion) containing quantities of which an increase in one results in a decrease in another. A quantity is said to be in inverse proportion to another quantity if it increases as the other decreases, or vice versa. —How To Live Though an Executive. Final approval 31.10.89

inverse square law: (physics, optics) one of several laws relating two quantities such that one quantity varies inversely as the square of the other. There are laws using this basic principle which apply to magnetism, sound and light. An example of this would be that of the illumination produced on a screen by a point source of light: if the distance between the light source and screen were doubled, the illumination on the screen would be reduced to a quarter of its original intensity; if the distance were trebled, the illumination would be reduced to one-ninth; if the distance were quadrupled, the illumination would be reduced to one-sixteenth, etc. Likewise, the intensity of sound decreases as the distance from its source increases: a bell 10 feet away sounds one-fourth as loud as the same bell 5 feet away; and if 15 feet away, it sounds one-ninth as loud as when 5 feet away. Applied to radiation, the inverse square law states that the intensity of radiation decreases in proportion to the square of the distance from its source. —All About Radiation Glossary. - law of acceleration: one of the three laws of motion formulated by Sir Issac Newton. It states that a force acting upon a body causes the body to accelerate in the direction of the force, the acceleration being directly proportional to the force and inversely proportional to the mass of the body. For example, a bicycle with one person on it will accelerate in direct proportion to the amount of force exerted on it and will decrease its acceleration when more mass, such as a passenger, is added to it, thus requiring more force be exerted in order to increase the acceleration. See also Newton in this glossary. —Perception of Truth Approved Glossary (9 June 92)
